Aaron Fields presents the following two lectures:

Drilling For Function:

This class is designed to discuss instructional techniques and information on how to help you be a better instructor, and make your drills and training more successful. “Drilling For Function” will help you understand how firefighters learn and retain the information you are presenting in a training environment. This isn’t a lecture designed to check a box or pad your resume’ – it’s designed to help you be a better teacher.

The Attacking Handline:

Aaron was the only representative from Washington State to serve on the technical panel for the UL/NIST Study of the Impact of Fire Attack Utilizing Interior and Exterior Streams on Firefighter Safety and Occupant Survival. During this lecture, he’ll review basic fire behavior, discuss fire stream use during fireground operations, and review findings from the UL study and other live fire burns he has personally been apart of.
